Your Profile

You are passionate about social justice. Diversity is an integral element of today's life, and by including different talents and viewpoints, society, individuals and organizations can flourish. You want to learn more about concepts like gender norms, LGBTQIA+, mental health and anti-racism, as well as create spaces to discuss intersectional identities and social positions related to gender, race, age, religion and disabilities. You want to study how inequalities are built within society and acquire deep understanding of feminist, postcolonial and queer theorizing to create effective diversity management practices, which hold the potential to transform society's institutions.

Key Information

The curriculum focuses on the development of thinking and tools in D&I (diversity and inclusion) management, rooted in humanities and social sciences. We study cultural theories, social psychology, management and organizations, with a strong focus on interpretative and qualitative methods.

In particular, the curriculum and learning activities develop your applied and critical reflection skills which help you to address today's major diversity topics and sustainable development challenges, ranging from privilege and marginalization to global crises.
