Politics, Philosophy and Economics

Politics, Philosophy and Economics

I have often wondered where I come from, where I am going and what “binds creation’s inmost energies”. I am interested in economics – but not the one that is limited exclusively to mathematics, strives for profit and with its complex needs for simple cost/benefit analyses, leaves people out.

I have always wondered why it is always economists that tell us about crises in the media and philosophers are never asked for a solution. Whether our politicians have ever read Hobbes, Marx or Kierkegaard. I don’t want to choose between a world of numbers, one of the words and the deeds.

I long for answers to the questions about the equitable co-existence of fair trade and fair society reforms and often only find criticism of the thinkers and philosophers suggestions. I am interested in politics as a practical tool of reason and am fascinated by the differences of cultures that clash with the globalization of economies.

I also wonder if there is an economic system that doesn’t, in the long term, destroy the planet. Maybe there is a different approach that brings prosperity for all and is an alternative to what we already have.

I want to learn how to resolve conflicts, to debate and to not just simply express my views, but to steadily develop them. I want to have very broad horizons. That is why I am going to be a universal scholar of our time and study Politics, Philosophy and Economics at Karlshochschule.

Degree Program Structure

Karlshochschule opens up a whole new, exciting world with each module in the Politics, Philosophy and Economics degree program. Looking at the module overview,

I immediately discover how the contents of my studies interlock, thereby revealing Politics, Philosophy and Economics to me as a continuum.

I imagine being able to experience everything on this campus. Including myself.

I am looking for a university that is pursuing an educational ideal focusing on individual growth and social responsibility. This university wants to amaze its students and help them grow into reflective individuals who help shape our future as thinkers and doers.

I imagine that this university is constantly striving to improve itself and remains grounded in reality, and that the exchange between professors, researchers, employees, and students is characterized by trust and humanity.
