Your Profile

You believe that the focus is the human being, and you want to learn more about how people perceive themselves and their lifeworld, how they behave, interact and transform the world. You want to acquire practical skills in the field of management and psychology (without the focus of going into psychological therapy). These skills will open your mind and many perspectives in consulting and counseling people, and developing teams and organizations. You want to be socially engaged, and you are curious about our interaction and ways of thinking. Finding human-based solutions to major challenges for individuals, organizations and markets to solve conflicts and develop teams is extremely rewarding to you.

Key Information

The curriculum focuses on psychological traditions rooted in the humanities and social sciences with a strong focus in interpretational and qualitative methods. It follows an interdisciplinary approach combining management studies, social psychology, organizational psychology, cognitive psychology, psychoanalysis, and cultural studies.

There is a strong focus on applied skills like coaching, counseling and consulting, but also in reflective potential of psychology for transforming our world into a better one. In a semester abroad, the students can specialize their skills at one of our partner universities
