Your Profile

You care for a sustainable future and want to take on responsibility – but you also want to have a career in line with your personal values. You are interested in questions like these: How can we trade sensibly in times of globalization and climate change? How can we develop business models which are both profitable and sustainable? How can we transform the flow of money, but also consumer behavior in our global world? To answer these questions, you want to apply managerial, but also economic, psychological and financial approaches in companies and organizations.

Key Information

The curriculum combines integral modules on management with special modules on aspects of sustainability, starting with theoretical and political aspects of global responsibility, discussing entrepreneurial and financial aspects of sustainability, informing you about options for fairer and more ecological value chains and transformative consumptions.

It follows an interdisciplinary approach combining management studies, finance, consumer studies and political studies. There is a strong focus on applying your skills on real-world business solutions. In the semester abroad, the students can specialize their skills at one of our partner universities.
