

With around 600 students and about 50 colleagues in academia and services, Karlshochschule International University in Karlsruhe is an innovative non-profit foundation university with a socio-cultural and critical orientation. Our mission is to contribute to transformation in economics, politics & society. The "Karls" creates space for inter- and transdisciplinary dialogue, inspiration and playful exploration as well as for challenging the status quo. We are particularly proud of our internationality, with one of the highest proportions of full-time international students from more than 70 different countries. As a feminist-oriented and anti-racist university, we strive to challenge structures of privilege and marginalization in society, and overcome all forms of discrimination. We are committed to the values of intercultural sensitivity, diversity, and sustainability.

In our study program, we provide responsible education to future change-makers. Our didactic approach is based on a constructivist philosophy of teaching including interactive forms like case studies, group-work, role plays, simulations, or project work. In this sense, experiential and experimental didactics and team teaching with colleagues and individual mentoring of students are your passion. We place special emphasis on the personal development of our students offering service learning and fostering civic engagement. Your interpretative and qualitative approach and research interests are reflected in your scholarly activities and publications and incorporated in your teaching. You will engage in applied critical teaching and research in the areas of your academic and practical expertise, work with our international faculty and student body, and develop national and global academic partnerships.

For the next possible date, we are looking for a:

Professor in the area of Political Philosophy, Global Governance, Civil Society and Social Movements (f/m/d)

We are especially interested in applicants who combine an inter- and transdisciplinary orientation at the intersection of political theory, political philosophy and postcolonial-feminist critique of power and domination with a focus on global governance, civic engagement and social movements. Additional knowledge in one of the following areas would be an advantage: global law, heterodox economics, social psychology.

We are looking for a candidate with the following profile:

- Deep understanding of post-structural and social constructionist theories and critical theory and ability to apply this to your field of expertise and teaching.
- Expertise to work with diverse, international and multicultural student groups
- Knowledge and experience with professional empowerment, personality development and counselling
- Awareness and sensitivity about all forms of sexism, racism and discrimination.
- A critical research and teaching agenda that is rooted in one or more of the following areas: governance, (comparative) politics, international law, social movements, and/or philosophy. Willingness to engage actively, creatively and joyfully in our academic community and become part of Karl's everyday life and living culture.
- Proven track record in civic engagement, an international biography and practical working experiences.
- A broad teaching and research interdisciplinary approach that encompasses a sophisticated understanding of political, social and economic institutions

Can you see yourself in that role? Are you able, as a fluent or native speaker, to lecture in English? Do you hold a PhD with one of the above-mentioned specifications and can build on a minimum of 3 years work experience outside higher education? Are you willing to collaborate in academic self-administration and, if required, to also assume responsibilities?
